- 2001-2003: Year I was born, until 2003 I didn't have any consciousness, so it is assumed that I was a happy innocent little baby.
- 2004: Year I gained consciousness, so I had to adapt to the harsh reality that society is, which hindered my happiness. As well I suffered two accidents, one in which I fell on my head, the other in which I stuck a fork in an electrical outlet.
- 2005: This year I joined kindergarten and started gaining new experiences and friendships.
- 2006: This year I joined elementary school, it was a completely different experience and world, however many of my previous friendships carried on over, so it was overall a smooth transition into this period.
- 2007: Great year overall as I was doing great in school, as well as sports.
- 2008: Disaster struck as I began a "rebel" phase, in which I had my first "fist fight" as well as a report to the principal's office. not all was bad though, as I learned from my phase to balance out life academically, socially and personally.
- 2009-2010: Learning from my mistakes, solid years, nothing much remarkable.
- 2011-2012: Even more solid years, as I won various awards and honors in school, as well as the opportunity to fly to Mexico City to meet the president of México in 2012, as well as participating in various math competitions.
- 2013: Entering middle school, many different issues started to arise. Since I started growing up, I needed to detach from my family and try to be more independent. It was difficult as an only child to detach from parents. So I started going to an orphanage as social service.
- 2014: Once I started to bond with the children at the orphanage, we even started a soccer team, it was a fantastic experience and even started the process for talks to adopt a brother.
- 2015: My heart was broken as we were just short of being capable of adopting, meaning I would stay as an only child. A dream of having a brother would have to go away.
- 2016: It was a tough year, since this was my last year in my hometown, as I moved to Guadalajara to start high school. This was a new experience for me, having to start over friendships.
- 2017: Fortunately I adapted and high school was going smoothly. I started my first relationship and friendships, as well as studies were going great.
- 2018: This year the relationship went downhill horribly, started to doubt myself and was having a very difficult time.
- 2019: The year college started, I had a new plan to manage my life and turnover to start having a great time.
- 2020: The plan was going extremely well, however COVID struck, so we all went on quarantine. I was bummed that I couldn't continue college due to economic problems, however on the plus side I started my first job.
- 2021: Coming back from COVID, I restarted my college classes, solidified my relationship, started to gain Web Development experience as well as trying out for the E-sports team. Overall setting good grounds for the rest of the college period.

- 2022: Excellent year, could have been perfect as I won various awards with the E-Sports Team, I was gaining experience working with a startup as well as my relationship was blossoming, however, at the end of the year disaster struck and we broke up, lost a final and the startup went bankrupt.
- 2023: Horrible start to the year, as I venture alone after a 2 and a half year relationship breakup, the second day in class I had my first crash as well as getting sick with COVID on January winter vacations. However, it is not all that bad as a new startup was made with experience from the previous one. This is the year I hope to refind myself emotionally, as professionally I am not giving up.
- 2024: After a groggy start, it is hoped that I found myself emotionally. That my startup is doing well and that I have effectively graduated with honors.
- 2025: Start of adult life.
